CHAPTER VIII.

AFRICAN NIGHT.

One afternoon the old Negro named Henry walked into the room, his clothes ragged and dirty. He looked at his feet and then looked up at the ceiling. He sat down in a corner and smoked his pipe, enjoying the smoke.

"You see, Miss Johnston," he said, "you cannot make a Negro out of me. I am a free man."

Miss Johnston shook her head. "That's true," she said. "But you must follow the rules of the school."

"I will do that," Henry replied. "I will work hard and be obedient."

Miss Johnston smiled. "Good," she said. "I am glad to have you here."

Henry nodded his head. "Thank you, Miss Johnston," he said. "I will do my best to learn."

Miss Johnston got up and went to the window. She looked out and saw the sun shining brightly. She turned back to Henry. "You are lucky," she said. "You have a good day."
Sitting by the River Side.

BY FALK JENKINS.

The scene was at a little village in the neighborhood of New York, where the river alternates with a river. The village was small, but the river was large and beautiful. The weather was pleasant, and there was a good breeze. The sun was shining, and the water was sparkling. The village was quiet, and there was a feeling of peace and contentment.

The two friends, who were sitting by the river side, were engaged in conversation. They were discussing the beauty of the scenery, the healthful influence of the river, and the advantages of country life.

"The river," said one, "is a great source of pleasure and recreation. It is a source of health and strength, and it is a source of inspiration. It is a source of solace and comfort, and it is a source of happiness and joy."

"Yes," replied the other, "I entirely agree with you. The river is a source of all good things. It is a source of all that is good and true and beautiful. It is a source of all that is noble and great and sublime."

The two friends continued to talk, and they enjoyed the beauty of the scenery, and they enjoyed the companionship of each other. They were happy, and they were content.

THE SPIRIT OF THE SETTLEMENT.

BY FRANCIS E. AMORY.

The spirit of the settlement was alive and well in the little village. The people were content and happy, and they were doing all that they could to improve the condition of the country.

The settlement was a place of refuge for the poor and the oppressed, and it was a place of refuge for the sick and the weak. The people were friendly and kind, and they were willing to help each other.

"The spirit of the settlement," said one of the people, "is the spirit of the people. It is the spirit of the community. It is the spirit of the country. It is the spirit of the world."

"Yes," replied another, "the spirit of the settlement is the spirit of the people. It is the spirit of the community. It is the spirit of the country. It is the spirit of the world."

The people continued to talk, and they enjoyed the spirit of the settlement, and they enjoyed the companionship of each other. They were happy, and they were content.
